IN CASE OF EMERGENCY, DRINK WATER BED

October 15 - November 14, 2020

"I took great pleasure in setting up this exhibition:" In case of emergency, drink water bed. "
It was also a first in a 33-year career!

Indeed, because of the covid 19 crisis, it was impossible for me to travel, meet the artists or see the works.

The virtual has become reality, by Zoom, Instagram and WhatsApp, confinement requires!

The theme of this exhibition has as a common denominator: the pandemic, not by the subject but by what it inspired or what it made feel to the 14 artists present.

Their fears, their joys, their desires, their dreams or their nightmares and of course and above all: their hopes.

"In case of emergency, drink water bed" brings together 14 artists aged 10 to 78. As you will discover, this is an exhibition synonymous with cheerfulness, colors, love and hope.

We could sum it up and conclude with this famous sentence from Gustave Flaubert: "Love is a spring plant that perfumes everything with its hope, even the ruins on which it clings."

ANDY ADAMSON'S meticulously crafted genius is a sobering introspection that implores the viewer to question what it means to be alive. As a triumphant avantgarde pastiche of all of his predecessors' technique and wisdom, he has aptly described his work as a "...unparalleled continuum of rapturous and transcendent visual experiences", "...an indulgent and carnal feast, endlessly penetrating the spirit and impregnating the weary soul.", and "...like an exorbitant aberration, arrogantly professing truths in the face of a jealous God". Creating sculptural actualizations of metaphorical utopic perfection infers that the edifice of our three-dimensional reality immensely undermines his ambitions; albeit the production of such scope and magnitude would be incomprehensible to the limits of known vision and temporal comprehension, assuredly resulting in a prophetic apocalyptic erasure of existence, only to be perpetually reanimated and birthed by the nourishing perplexing delights of aesthetic excellence that was formerly its exterminator. Andrew's masterful insemination of contemporary and classical perceptions are effortlessly exhibited in an orgy of conspicuous pleasure, executing a paramount of mortal achievements that will at no time be surpassed.

Lény Gaud is a French painter and sculptor, born in Nice in 1991, where he lives and works.

Before devoting himself fully to his artistic practice, he officiated as a pastry chef, a fruitful period in which he retained a taste for experimentation and attention to detail. Lover of fat and beautiful curves, he will keep this relationship to matter and sensations that he now transposes with pastel and clay.

Lény Gaud has fun at the little things in life through free and spontaneous creation, accessible through the very essence of his subjects. Anecdotes, picturesque scenes and characters from a peaceful and good-natured daily life, in which we take the time to water the flowers and daydream on the toilets, testifying to the poetry of the grotesque he meets.

Chineur, he is fond of the old and the spirit of yesteryear, drawing his inspiration from objects he revisits: trinkets, country paintings, porcelain animals, holiday memories.

We find in his recent works a setting in motion of these sketches, by the addition of a mechanism. Beyond giving it a certain functionality, which is reminiscent of art automatons, its primary desire is to surprise the observer, to amuse him. Above all, this shows the artist's desire to reflect on his work and to immerse himself in it to heart: through this mechanical relationship, Lény Gaud shows himself as he is, a joker.

«This series of 2020 summertime drawings are expansive and playful, relying heavily on color and a sense of “joyful entropy”. Themes within the work include animated relationships to water, an altered sense of time, psychedelia and superstition, alternative approaches to nourishment, and playful allusions to the looming threats around us.»

«The vase piece was made with my fond memories of living in a big family. I'm the youngest of eight brothers and one sister. Growing up, we lived under one roof in a poor remote farm in Singapore, together with my very strict mother and my carefree father, in-laws, nieces, and nephews. There were enough stories to write a whole book about our times on the farm. I tried to incorporate as much humor in this piece as possible because of my love for my family, and missing them now that I'm living in America in the pandemic. The Chinese cultural influence is evident because of my mother's teachings, but it's also diminishing as we're uniquely Singaporean—a modern cosmopolitan country in southeast Asia.»

The mugs are about women having fun, as to reflect the feminism initiative that I care about.»

Exploring ceramics, painting and the art of puppetry, Lindsay Montgomery's work brings to the fore personal mythologies interested in, among other things, death and mysticism, the evolution of modes of power as well as family dynamics. Her recent creations reinterpret the imagery and forms of Italian Maiolica ceramics and illustrations from medieval manuscripts to create edifying tales, myths and narratives highlighting lingering tensions with monarchy, colonialism and feminism. The reuse of the Istoriato or "painted history" of the Italian Renaissance allows the artist to recover a device that has contributed to the propagation of patriarchal social norms to reveal, through strong images and narratives, the inequities and imbalances that afflict our societies.

With an interdisciplinary master's degree from the University of Minnesota and an interdisciplinary bachelor's degree from the Nova Scotia College of Art and Design, Lindsay Montgomery has exhibited her work widely in Canada and the United States. She is the recipient of the National Council on Education for the Ceramic Arts Emerging Artist Award (2019), the Winifred Shantz Award for Ceramics (2018), the Helen Copeland Memorial Award and the Joyce Carlyle Memorial Scholarship in the Crafts Endowment (2014).

Born in central Pennsylvania, Rebecca Morgan works in painting, drawing, and ceramics that subvert stereotypes of Appalachia. Imbued with folk tradition and a sly sense of humor, her work peels apart the simultaneous reverence and disgust for rural people. Stylistically, Morgan embraces the hyper-detailed naturalism of Dutch masters, as well as absurd, repulsive caricature suggestive of underground cartoonists like R. Crumb. Although they often contain modern clues, her characters and scenes evoke a romanticized, nostalgic America, nonexistent but wistfully recalled, much like Norman Rockwell's illustrations. Morgan's works question what such images were selling in their conception, and she gives her archetypal maids, hillbillies, and dandies the space to explore contemporary issues of women reclaiming their subjectivity, a pop-cultural false sense of romance, and ideas about masculinity, power, escapism, and hedonistic backwoods pleasure.

Liquid landslides of juicy color travel over landscapes of softer subtle hues, interrupted by crunchy raw slip built up over the course of multiple firings. I take objects that are historically presented as minimal and humble and lovingly dress them in vibrant geometric patterns or seductively hazy gradients, with meticulously hand-crafted actions that mimic digital effects. I'm focused on using the vessel as a conduit between tradition and personal experience —a symbol that evokes the long history of ceramic craft, while serving as a stand-in for a body. Utilizing the vessel to suggest figures, I alter their surfaces with layers of ornamentation as a strategy to investigate ideas about memory and self-identity. The different surface manipulation and physical alteration of each form signifies my struggle of connecting to and reconciling with my past self. When I recall memories of myself before becoming sober, I struggle to clearly remember and feel connected to an older version of me. Every time I revisit these memories, they become slightly altered, blending together unreliably. This abstraction finds its way formally into my work, as recognizable wares become warped, flattened and distorted.

Working within a craft that is often approached from a traditionalist point of view, I acknowledge the past as foundational while smiling towards the future, incorporating newer techniques of 3D printing, and contemporary approaches like applying laser printed decals to slipcased or hand-built objects. Clay helps me foster a feeling of glee and acceptance, creating space to connect with these complex and difficult memories in a positive light and move forward. Through my work, I am slowly realizing that the truth and endurance of my memories are less valuable to me than the ability to freely and frequently engage with whatever version of them currently persists. These techniques, when applied to vessels, actualize a process of renewal and reinvention on familiar bodies and forms. In this way, my practice gives me the space to remake and reconsider past histories of craft traditions and past versions of myself.

« I have never partook in any institutionalized education so not a lot changed for me during covid other than I didn't get to hang out with my best friend anymore.

Usually my family helps me a fair bit with my ceramics process but with covid and my parents not working their usual jobs our lives became all about ceramics and gardening. I raised a chicken from an egg and now June Seventeenth (chickens name) is as special as our dogs. Our gardens overflow with veggies, we have rethought many things and I think it's safe to say that our lives going forward will be ever changed by this deep resting period we all just went through.

So incase of emergency take a deep breath, drink up and share the love of the people around you.»

Born in Milwaukee, Wisconsin, Kaitlin Smrcina lives and works in Chicago, Illinois. She received her BFA in December 2015 from The School of the Art Institute of Chicago focusing in Ceramics, Sculpture, and Fiber Arts and Material Studies. Smrcina has worked as, an intern for Carol Jackson, 2014 Whitney Biennial artist, to help prepare for solo show "High Plains Drifter," at Threewalls gallery in Chicago, an assistant curator and studio manager for the Skragghole Collective gallery in Grand Rapids, Michigan, and a production assistant, and assistant stage manager for Redtwist Theatre in Chicago. Her experience in large scale making, curation, and theatre inspired Smrcina to work in a historic way, creating environments like sets, or window displays, that showcase a hyper unreal and immersive atmosphere.

Kaitlin is a first and foremost a maker, craving immediacy, and interested in the complexities of picket signs, jokes, and cartoons. In addition to the philosophical and psychological references found in her work, Kaitlin draws inspiration from the immersive worlds of Yoshitomo Nara, Yayoi Kusama, and Hayao Miyazaki. Paralleling her favorite artist's devotion, Smrcina wants to consume the truths of dimensionality and prove the impossible is possible when imagination becomes reality. Kaitlin has been showing her work since 2012 mostly in the Midwest, but has recently started participating in small shows and publications in Canada and Europe.
